EDITOR'S NOTES

My notes to you this time will, I am afraid, be the last, as the demands on my time have now assumed such proportions that they exclude any relaxation from business.

I have enjoyed the work and appreciate the increased contact it has brought with you, my patient reader.

A volunteer is needed to keep this section of the Magazine going. No great literary skill is needed, as is obvious to those who have read recent issues. The editor is, of course, often shot at, but he still has the last word. There are many, I am sure, who can find ample time to give the few hours necessary each term to this privileged journal. Would you like to have a try at it?
